

COMPREHENSIVE CASE MANAGEMENT PLAN

for the case of Lily and Rosemary

CASE DETAILS

- Lily (a graduate student at Clemson) is being abused by her now-ex, Rosemary.
- When they broke up, Rosemary threatened to take the dogs, and later reminded Lily that they know her schedule
- Lily needs a safe space away from Rosemary, and potentially to change her class schedule
- If she's able to move, she will likely need assistance with costs related to moving and utilities.
- She would also need a space for her dogs, if she is unable to house them with her

RATIONALE

- Lily has many strengths which help her in this case
- She has friends which she can rely on, at least temporarily to let her have a safe space to live.
- As a graduate student she has access to a myriad of staff and faculty at the College
- Acting in the role of broker, there are plenty of resources and assets which Lily can access to help her.

INTERVENTIONS

- Using her access to friends, Lily can find a temporary housing solution while working to access other resources
- She should seek the legal route, filing a police report and then an order of protection – this acts as a restraining order with protections for property and pets, as well as allowing exclusive access to a domicile.
- She should then discuss the matter with campus police, and her advisor to see if it is necessary, and possible, to change her class schedule.
- As a backup plan there are resources relating to necessary legal help to break a lease (SC bill 4158), and help with rent, utilities, and moving
- There are also resources for pet boarding to ensure her dogs' safety
- For the sake of Lily's mental health and wellbeing, individual and group therapy options are also available.

GOALS

- Lily's safety is a number one priority
- Her first goal is finding a permanent living arrangement away from Rosemary, whether that be with friends, evicting Rosemary, or moving.
- This goal has two paths, discussed previously, which is filing a police report, filing an order of protection, and evicting Rosemary, or getting legal help, talking to the property management, and getting rental assistance
- Her secondary goal is making sure she's safe on campus
- To do this, she should talk to campus police to document the threats, and then to her advisor and/or professors to make changes to her schedule, as needed

PROGRESS MONITORING

- The best way to monitor progress with Lily is to have regular meetings with her as she completes each step of her intervention plan.
- Evaluating the effectiveness of the plan should be simple, as the goals are straightforward and easily measurable.
- The goals must be completed to ensure Lily is safe on-and-off campus, and remains on track for her graduate studies.
- The plan having choices allows for Lily to choose a preferred option and still have a positive outcome.

LIMITATIONS AND CONSIDERATIONS

- Violation of trust may be necessary if Lily is unwilling to file a police report.
- As a mandatory reporter, it would be required to file one, even if it goes against Lily's wishes.
- Not taking the legal route would also greatly hinder the options available for care.
- Details related to the plan, such as planned living arrangement and schedule changes would likely need to be kept secret to keep the information from somehow getting to Rosemary.
- Keeping the campus and local police up to date and informed should help lessen this need, as they can monitor the situation and take whatever legal action may be necessary.

CRITICAL REFLECTION

- Some options in this case plan are more viable than others, but all options are possible with work
- Lily has a lot of strengths which she is already using.
- Her safety is a priority, and school is secondary. This plan accounts for both while still having options that Lily can choose from
- There may be some small challenges with changing her schedule mid-semester, and with finding enough assistance with changing housing (if that's the desired option), but neither are impossible
- Accounting for police involvement, it may not even be necessary to change Lily's schedule or have her move
